Balinese New Year

Bali is an island and the smallest province of Indonesia, and includes a few smaller neighbouring islands, notably Nusa Penida.

It is located at the westernmost end of the Lesser Sunda Islands, between Java to the west and Lombok to the east, and has its capital of Denpasar at the southern part of the island.

Bali is an island steeped in tradition with the Balinese New Year running from 29 to 31 March.

The three-day celebration begins carnival style on 29 March with processions and parades before concluding with a day of absolute silence, contemplation and meditation on 31 March.

Tawur Agung Kesanga, or the Day of the Dead Moon on 30 March sees locals converge on village squares to give offerings to huge papier-mâché gargoyles known as the ogoh-ogoh, designed to frighten away evil spirits.

Traditional gamelan music, firecrackers and partying continues throughout the night, ending just before sunrise with the torching of the ogoh-ogohs, which is seen as a final symbolic gesture to be rid of the evil spirits for the year ahead.

Nyepi follows on 31 March with absolute silence and contemplation for 24 hours, with the idea that when the evil spirits descend, they will decide that Bali is uninhabited and leave the island alone for another year.

Alila Hotels & Resorts' four Bali retreats offer Nyepi packages, for guests who want to journey to the heart of the celebrations and experience a slice of Balinese tradition.
