Reasons to write about

Hadrian's Wall Path National Trail 10th Anniversary

The Hadrian's Wall Path National Trail is the 84-mile trail following the historic World Heritage Site from Wallsend in the North East of England to Bowness-on-Solway in Cumbria.

This takes in one National Park (Northumberland) and two Areas of Outstanding Natural Beauty (Solway Coast & North Pennines).

There are also a number of Roman-themed attractions to visit including :

- Birdoswald Roman Fort where you can see the longest remaining continuous stretch of Wall

Fall colour in New England

Fall in New England is a time of spectacular colour changes as the foliage of the six states transforms itself from greens to reds, gold, orange and purples.

The process starts in mid-September in New Hampshire, Vermont and Maine, then spreads slowly south into Massachusetts, Connecticut and Rhode Island, culminating in the peak of Fall foliage in the first half of October.

Fall foliage spots include :

Burke Mountain, Vermont

Located between the Green Mountains and the Connecticut River in the northern part of the state, Vermont's Northeast Kingdom has an unspoiled beauty that can be appreciated by exploring its multi-use trails, among America's most popular with hikers and mountain bikers.

Presidential Range, New Hampshire

The tallest peaks in New Hampshire's White Mountains are a range named after U.S. Presidents, with Mount Washington the highest elevation in the northeastern United States at 6,288 feet.

Anywhere in the White Mountain National Forest guarantees a wealth of autumn colour.

Kennebunkport, Maine

Maine's small coastal villages allow visitors to experience the fall colours in ocean-side settings. Camden, where the mountains meet the sea, is a favourite spot.

Lake Waramaug, Connecticut

Located in the north-west corner of Connecticut, the rolling Litchfield Hills form an area of genteel charm and immense natural beauty.

Lake Waramaug, the area's largest body of water, is named after a revered Native American chief.
